Harold Westraven

Lurking in Darmas is the Phoenixborn Harold Westraven. He appears in The Demons of Darmas. There are hints he may have changed himself to be a vampire or a werewolf. He returns in The Flood of Moon Cove.

Harold Westraven
Art from The Demons of Darmas

The Phoenixborn define their own existence, and this is especially true of Harold Westraven. Harold has embraced the city of Darmas' legends, and for no other reason than it gives him delight, has used his power to make these horrors a reality. The people of Darmas lock their doors well before the sun sets, and cower in their homes as strange noises echo in the streets. Woe to the weary traveler who finds herself caught outdoors, when the howls of wolves sound from the alleyways, and the squeaking of bats erupts from dark cellars.

History

The announcement contains almost all of what is known of Harold.

Conjurations

Like most ceremonial users, Harold has only a single conjuration: Vampire Bat Swarm. These are based in the legends of Darmas mentioned above.

His other conjuration, the Hunter's Mark, is likely a callback to the marking and stalking of prey that vampires and werewolves are known for.

Card appearances

- Dark Reaping
- Transmute Magic
- Consume Soul
- Full Moon
- Drag Below (Flood of Moon Cove Abyss aspect)

Quotes:

- “Your heart sings to me of its blood.”
- “A hunter's heart must syncopate with their prey's.”
- “I hunger only for you.”
- “He is a tick you will not easily pluck off.”
- “They are my hungry little angels.”

- “What gifts I bestow, so too can I strip away.”
